President's Message

The change in season is apparent all around us, in our gardens, in the cooler weather, and in how we select the daily activities that help to keep us warm and closer to the home and hearth. But this is not the time to forget about roses---this is the time to stay involved in new and different ways with your rose friends and the Penn Jersey District and The American Rose Society. There are many opportunities coming up for you to contribute to the West Jersey Rose Society and the Penn-Jersey District as well.

We need YOU to be part of the spring Rose Show Planning Committee, the Penn-Jersey District Get Away Weekend, and for those who can travel, the American Rose Society Palm Springs Convention. All of these opportunities are exciting ways in which you can help to educate others about roses and enjoy yourself too. So plan now and pick up the phone.

To be part of the WJRS Spring Rose Show Committee—please call me at 609-298-4160 or e-mail me at ilanaokum@aol.com. We need you and your ideas to make the Rose Show even better. Also contact Gus Banks for more information about the Rose Get Away Weekend in February, 2010. That will be lots of fun with an arrangement workshop, a photo contest and an opportunity to share pictures of your rose gardens. Finally, contact Kevin Glaes kevyg@frontiernet.net our Penn-Jersey District Director or Elaine Adler eadler@westtown.org our new Region I Director about the ARS Convention—they are our representatives at the national level and will be at the Palm Springs Convention.

See you on November 18 for our program on “Organic Gardening.”
Stay warm and keep enjoying the roses.

Roses in November Still Need TLC

Consulting Rosarian Report

By: Iliana Okum

Cooler days and nights, and more rain than sunshine have brought a blaze of fall colors to my garden. While the red and yellow leaves of the tall oak next door rain down each day and cover the grass, the driveway and even the rose bushes out front—my roses Abraham Darby, Teasing Georgia and Honey Perfume will not be hidden—they are still sending out lovely golden roses and fragrance to delight the neighbors.. Not to be left behind, Queen Elizabeth in the back yard has surprised me by sending out tall canes with lovely pink blooms that I had not seen all summer. Even the red rose hips of the climber Golden Celebration look happy as they blow in the breeze.

I must admit that these observations have all been during quick walks around the garden between rain showers and during morning gazes from the warm kitchen window—with a cup of coffee in hand. Although my roses still need lots of Tender Love and Care, my recent fall gardening attempts have been largely sporadic and not full of the energy I had last spring and summer.

So—what to do in November in the rose garden? Give your roses lots of TLC. After all if you have invested time and energy all season and have garnered some blue ribbons and awards at last summer's shows—this is the time to keep your roses healthy going into winter. First, find that favorite old sweater and gather the tools and spray one more time to complete the fall cleaning and sprucing. Finish cleaning the beds and other debris blown in by the winds. Your roses will appreciate having a clean bed for the winter. If you have seen signs of black spot—and some roses in my garden did lose leaves because of it last summer—spray with Mancozeb and another type of systemic fungicide. By using a combination of these fungicides you will have better results and will keep the black spot from spreading. Keep the spray programs going until you get rid of all signs of fungus. Your roses will respond by getting healthier before the hard freeze comes along in December. Of course, you should also use appropriate protection and caution when using any of these sprays in your garden by following the recommended guidelines on the package. Wear proper protective gloves, goggles and avoid inhaling the vapors. Always wash your gardening clothes separately afterwards.

You may want to try more organic methods to get rid of black spot. There are many new organic products to try on the market that promise to get rid of the black spot fungus. At our November meeting, we will have a presentation about these from our guest speaker from the Organica Company. I have used organic fungicides in the past and certainly want to learn more about their effectiveness and methods of use including frequency and best times to apply them. It is always good to have several sources of fungicide to use since the black spot fungus develops a resistance over time if we use the same single-site fungicides.

To prevent insects from burrowing in for the winter, one thing I have been doing during late fall and will do again—is put down a dormant season oil spray. It is always best —when the first frost has come and the roses are dormant. I have used Neem Oil to ensure that the dreaded midge and other mites do not remain in the beds during the winter. There are many other dormant season oil sprays being used successfully. If you are interested in more organic gardening try some organic sprays.

I recommend the website: www.OrganicRoseCare.org.

They have excellent articles and information that can help you in the garden. And, the Peter Beales Complete Natural Rose Care Program also includes organic fungicides and insecticides that help to suppress a variety of fungus and diseases. I am trying out their Good Night Roses Program this season to not only prepare the roses for winter but to also stimulate the biological activity in the soil this winter. Check out the following: www.organicplanthealth.com for more information

Finally, I have evaluated several roses that need to be replaced. This is still a good time to transplant or plant some new roses. I will be getting some help with this—because transplanting roses requires more energy than what I have to give right now. I have already put my holiday gift wish list together too. With any luck ---that list will turn into new additions to my garden next spring. And, because all the big stores were having final plant sales in the past few weeks---I have purchased some companion plantings of bulbs—to look forward to some bright tulips and narcissus emerging early next spring as the green shoots of the roses emerge. Giving lots of TLC to your roses now will help you to enjoy the holidays ahead with a garden that is clean and ready for winter.

Member's Garden Program

AT THE GET-A-WAY WEEKEND:

Members who would like to show slides of their garden may contact Kevin Glaes kevyg@frontiernet.net.

- You don't have to have a lot of photos as long as they show how you have your garden laid out and anything special about your garden that you want to share with other members.
- Kevin will work with you to convert your photos into a Powerpoint presentation. We want to see how everybody gardens!

Arrangement Program

Attention: Arrangers and interested persons.

Traditional designs are a large part of our home decorating and our rose shows. We will discuss what makes a design a traditional design, what containers would be appropriate, and a few of the general things to look for in a traditional design. The workshop will be making a design using a candle stick as a container. A special candle adaptor and oasis will be provided as a part of the workshop for you to use and take home. Flowers and greens will be provided, but you must bring a taper candle holder about 3 to 5 inches tall, clippers and newspaper for the table and easy clean up.

If you are staying for dinner, we would like to use the finished designs as table decorations. Be sure to put your name on the bottom of the candle stick so you get your design back after dinner.

See registration form.

Fee: $10 which will cover the adapter, oasis, greens and flowers.

All are welcome to attend, if you wish not to do a design, you can just watch.
